Oenanthe finschii breeds in Turkey and the Caucasus, with Europe accounting for less than a quarter of its global breeding range. Its European breeding population is large (>100,000 pairs), but its trend between 1970–1990 was unknown. Although no trend was available for Georgia during 1990–2000, the species was stable across the rest of its European range, and consequently it is provisionally evaluated as Secure.
