Sylvia rueppelli breeds almost entirely in Europe, where it is a summer visitor to Greece and Turkey. Its European breeding population is large (>200,000 pairs), and was stable between 1970–1990. Although the species declined to some extent in its Turkish stronghold 1990–2000, it remained stable in Greece, and probably underwent only a slight decline overall. Consequently, it is provisionally evaluated as Secure.
